To whom it may concern:

I am pleased to recommend Anika Edrei, who served as Project Management Lead at Distractive. As Co-Founder and CMO at Distractive, I worked closely with Anika and witnessed her significant impact on our organization.

Anika arrived during a period of operational chaos and single-handedly rebuilt our project management system. She architected and implemented a new ClickUp implementation, established cross-functional processes for alignment, and created essential reporting structures that became the backbone of our operations across all departments (creative, content, product, web, PR, and leadership).

Beyond operational systems, Anika excelled at high-stakes coordination. She led the full reporting function for our largest client, Polkadot, a politically sensitive responsibility that demanded precision, discretion, and strong cross-functional coordination, all of which she handled with professionalism.

Anika also demonstrated strategic thinking that goes far beyond a typical PM role. She was proactive in identifying the organization's future needs, from exploring AI integration to helping the leadership team become better managers. She consistently looked ahead, anticipated challenges, and brought forward thoughtful solutions.

She also managed complex stakeholder dynamics and competing priorities with exceptional calm, clarity, and emotional intelligence. Anika protected the team's focus while ensuring alignment across departments. This is a rare skill, and it made her an essential stabilizing force within the organization.

When work began to slow down, she kept the team grounded and productive. She maintained structure and focus at a time when it would have been easy for morale to slip. Her leadership during that period was invaluable.

Anika is ready for a broader operational role. She has the systems thinking, cross-functional leadership, and strategic foresight required for senior operations, Chief of Staff, or PMO leadership positions. She leaves our team with my full confidence and respect. Her departure is the result of organizational changes and is in no way related to her performance.

I recommend her without reservation and would hire her again without hesitation.

Please feel free to contact me if further information would be helpful.

Sincerely,

Kathleen Butler
